

Executive Summary

Foot Locker wanted to know which of two subject lines would drive more engagement and revenue for a limited-edition sneaker drop campaign. We tested an urgency-based line against a hype/emoji-driven line across 20,000 simulated recipients to find out.

What We Tested

	Email Subject Line
Email A (control group)	"Hurry! Limited pairs remaining."
Email B (test group)	"Drop alert 🔥 Your exclusive access inside."

Key Results

- B got more people to open the email
- A got more of those openers to click through
- B generated more purchases and revenue in this test, but the difference wasn't large enough to be conclusive
- Neither variant dominates across every metric

Recommendation

Roll out Email B for future sneaker drop campaigns based on its confirmed advantage in getting recipients to open. However, revenue performance requires validation across live campaigns before making B the permanent default. A hybrid subject line combining urgency and hype elements is recommended as the next test.

Business Impact

Subscriber List Size	Incremental Revenue vs Email A
50,000	$9,000
100,000	$18,000
500,000	$90,000